Ayodhya Ram Mandir: Glimpses of preparations ahead of the much-awaited inauguration on Jan 22

The ongoing construction of the Ram temple complex in Ayodhya is set to be self-sufficient in various aspects, including sewage and water treatment facilities, as well as amenities for the elderly and specially-abled individuals, according to officials. Champat Rai, the general secretary of the Ram temple trust, presented the landscape plan at the trust's office, emphasizing that 70% of the 70-acre complex will be dedicated to green spaces. The complex's self-sufficiency will be achieved through the inclusion of two sewage treatment plants (STPs), a water treatment plant (WTP), and a dedicated power supply line.
